Denio Creek, mentioned in attached application, rises on south slope of Pueblo Mountain, being the southern end of the Steen Mountain group, near the south line of Harney County, Oregon, and flows southerly about four miles in well defined by small channel and crosses the State line at the town of Denio, Oregon.

Just above the north line of the lands described in said application to be irrigated the creek flattens out and spreads over the land. This has formed natural meadow and grass lands that have been used by applicant for pasture since date of entry on the land. It is proposed to construct a ditch along the north boundary of the land and distribute the water as it comes in the natural flood period each spring. Small diversion dams only will be required.

The flood waters passing over this land are again packed up in the channel of Pueblo slough and carried northerly into Oregon and finally discharged in Tum Tum Lake.
